The Main Line Fly -Tyers welcomes Gra- hame Maisey as he pre- sents a talk and discus- sion on the “Common Sense Behind Good Fly Tying”.

According to Gra- hame a good fly starts with a good hook and proper thread colors.

Nobody knows how long ago various kinds of fish hooks have been in use, but it is quite probable that the Cro -Magnon Man, who appeared on the scene 30 – 40,000 years ago, was familiar with and used fish hooks in his struggle to survive.

The first known types of fish hooks were made of different materials. This was a problem for archaeolo- gists, trying to estab- lish the historical facts about fish hooks, The materials used back then were not very du- rable.

Today of course materials are much better. You can go on line at any number of websites and buy fishhooks. Chances are, however, the steel is made in China and might not be very good for the best trout fly.

Grahame will tell you the secrets on what to look for in order to get good steel, and he will also talk about the importance of using proper thread colors.

New Trout Fishing Book

A fraternity brother of mine, Glenn Busch, has just written Journey To The Final Cast A memoir of fishing, friendship, and growing old. Glenn is a great storyteller. In the book he recounts how he and his fishing friends have wandered in diverse places to comb the waters, hoping to catch the trophy fish...or just be near the water in the company of others He lives down in Virginia and came up to fish the Clarion River with me a couple of years ago. I will have a copy of the book with me at this Thursday's meeting. If you are interested in purchasing a book please contact see me or contact Glenn directly at glenn.busch@gmail.com

Barry is having Club Day at the shop on Saturday 2/25, 11am- 3pm. He wants us to come down, tie some flies, and promote our club. Sam, Chris and Steve will be there. Weather Affects Angling Tactics Casting and presentation in the wind.

Accuracy is at a premium, get as close as possible and let the wind hide your approach. Try to drive the forward cast low, and allow the loop to unroll just above the target. Driving the forward cast too high puts the loop into a zone with more wind and also gives the wind more time to act on the cast before it can drop the fly to the target.

If the wind is blowing directly upstream, don't try to present the fly downstream with a reach cast. You may be able to make the reach with the line and but of the leader, but the wind will invariably kick the tippet and fly back upstream, leaving a downstream belly in the tippet that will cause drag on every drift. With upstream wind, rely on a traditional upstream cast, and hope that surface chop will hide small amounts of drag that come with this style of presentation. http://www.troutu.com/class/how_weather_affects_trout_fishing

The Northwest Territories by Rick Say

We awoke to a cold gray morning. While I was being discrete, I came upon a large wood grouse. He seemed to not be afraid of me. That's the thing about being so far up in the northwest. The animals and birds aren't used to humans and they have no fear and appear to be just curious. I must have been an interesting sight for that grouse. We broke camp and canoed down the river for several hours. Along the way we saw two bald eagles. That makes five that we have seen so far on this trip.

We canoed through a brief rain shower and had our first portage. I mentioned earlier that Fort Smith was started at the base of a set of rapids as a portage town. When the water is too rough for the boats you have to unload everything and carry the gear and the boats around the rough patch of water. This sounds easy enough until you have to do it yourself. Our first portage started out messy enough as my feet got thoroughly soaked when I climbed out of the canoe to get to the shore. We hiked fully laden with gear up through a swampy area and unmarked rocky trail for about a half a mile until we came back down on the other side of the rapids. We did this numerous times until all the gear and the boats were transported.

The sun came out and we canoed several more miles before we had to portage again. Later Alex saw a moose and a young calf but they moved off quickly before we could get a good look at them. Two of the guys went pike fishing. Using salt water flies they caught six. They also spotted a large grey wolf. The wildlife is picking up as we move west and south. In the afternoon we saw a lot of loons, geese, ducks and another bald eagle. After we ran a series of small rapids the trip ended with another portage. We found a real nice place to camp with a steady breeze to keep the mosquitos at bay.

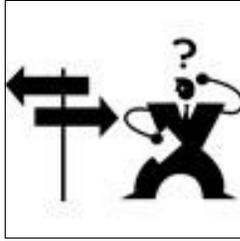

I went fishing from the river bank after dinner. On a deep cast I caught a small trout. As I got him right to shore he jumped off the line. Suddenly, a big pike darted after the fish. He missed! Then he cruised right in front of me. My lure was in six inches of water. The pike saw it and I flicked it. He took it and was off on a run. About fifteen minutes later I brought him in; a 46" lunker weighing about twenty pounds.
